Summary

The course on Cultural Psychology gives in-depth knowledge on the cultural understanding of personality and individual differences. While the mainstream psychology is dominated by research coming from the US and other English speaking countries, the new wave in psychology is shifting the focus of attention on culturally embedded construction of personality and individual differences. The aim of this course is to demonstrate how culture creates the psyche and how individuals, in turn, contribute to formation of the culture. The ideas of a "global" culture are discussed in the end. The basic principle of intercultural mediation are given along the topics from which the techniques arise.
